WOMEN PRIZE-PIGHTERS.

Two women of muscle and avoirdupois ppeared before an Eastern District gathering last night on the stage of a public theatre in modified fighting costume and proceeded to pummel each other after the violent fashion prevalent in the prize

The place was crowded to suffocation. Brooklyn politicians of prominence graced the ringside. Brooklyn policemen, conspicuous for their inaction until the best of "the fun" was over, were sprinkled liberally through the throng. A howling and miscellaneous mob of humanity made up the rest of the cultured assemblage.
A prize of $25 was dependent upon the issue of the fight. The women clinched and slugged and bled through three rounds and part of a fourth, when, seeing that one of them was giving out and that the sport was likely to run low, the police ended the affair.

The occurrence hardly calls for comment. In the disgusting details of the brutal affair is to be read all that could be suggested by any pen. But for Brook-Charles S. Mr. Joycz's experience is thus made sufficiently costly so that he will probably take good care for the future not to trifle with the staid yet susceptible heart of any widow, be she youthful or mature.

And as for Mrs. PARTRIDGE, she is fully and triumphantly prepared to amend the familiar precept of the elder Weller, "Samivel," said that gentleman in the book," be werry careful o' widders." To her own sex, and in no mere words of book, Mrs. Pantridge might impressively Beware of widowers."
